New This Year! Scandinavian Dance Fundamentals

Tor Stallvik with his wife Randi Stallvik bring their experience and clear presentation style along with passion for dance traditions.

Erlend Viken, a highly acclaimed fiddler, will accompany them and share his music traditions with us.

Ellge Jakobsson, Karin Hansen, and fiddler Christer Samuelsson bring their experience studying, researching and teaching the Slångpolska to us along with passion for and love of these traditions.

Ben Teitelbaum’s training on nyckelharpa and enthusiasm for the music and traditions has led him not only to teaching and performing on the instrument, but also seeking a PhD in ethnomusicology.

Peter Michaelsen is known for his fiddling, teaching and music leadership. His powerful style and broad repertoire inspire musicians and dancers alike.

Each summer since 1980, some of Scandinavia’s most distinguished dancers and musicians have come to share with us their cultural expertise and infectious love of their dance and music traditions. Dancers and musicians of all levels are welcome. The mission of Scandia Camp Mendocino is to provide enriching opportunities to learn about and actively experience dance, music, and cultural traditions of Scandinavia (primarily Norway and Sweden) in a welcoming community.

Dance and Music Classes are designed for both newer and more experienced Scandinavian dancers and musicians. We change partners frequently during dance classes, and we encourage partner changing during parties. Musicians should have at least one year of experience, though not necessarily with Scandinavian music. Musicians are encouraged to bring a recording device, as tunes are taught by ear.

Daytime activities include classes in dance, music, crafts, singing, folklore and culture sessions, practice sessions, and opportunities to enjoy the woodlands.

Evenings include music and social activities before dinner, after-dinner concerts, and Scandinavian dance parties with live music by our staff and student musicians.

Scandinavian Dance Fundamentals will introduce newer dancers to the fundamental skills of successful turning dancing and partnering.

Please go to our website for photos and more extensive biographical information: <www.ScandiaCampMendocino.org>.
How did you get started in Traditional Scandinavian dance or music?

What was your inspiration? What led you in this direction? If you both dance and play the music, what came first, your feet or the fiddle (musical instrument)?

The first group of stories were in the previous issue of NCS News (Jan, 2011). I plan to continue the stories in the next issue of the Northern California Spelmanslag News. Send in your story! The newsletter is mailed, and is also online. You can see the newsletter at: <www.norcalspelmanslag.org>.

You can write a little or a lot (10 – 1000 words). Photos welcome.

In 2005, the Christmas Revels here in Washington, D.C. had a Scandinavian theme. We were joined by three dancers from Norway - Karin Brennesvik, Sigbjørn Rua, and Tom Løvli - and several local dancers. In rehearsals and on stage, I was totally awed by the telespringar, numedalgangar, and halling. The local dancers invited me to their monthly parties, and I was hooked.

I've been to the HFAA workshop in Wisconsin twice and to Karin's winter dance camp in Norway once...and I'd love to go again. I lived in Norway for a year in the late 90's, so it's also been fun to resurrect my rusty language skills.

I started International Folk Dancing in 1948/1949 with the University of California Folk and Square Dance group in Berkeley. Among other dances, we learned the Hambo, a fun dance, and especially appealing since my grandparents had emigrated from Sweden. That summer, my girl friend and I traveled to Sweden, and I began meeting my cousins. One of the highlights of the summer was dancing the Hambo with my cousin, Carl, who was in his mid-fifties at the time.

I met my husband dancing and we have been dancing ever since. About 15 years ago, we switched from an international group to a Scandinavian group. Then, I learned many polskas and regional dances from all over Scandinavia. I was happy—the dances are challenging, and though it was hard at first to connect the names to the dances, the challenges were worth the rewards of learning the dances. I love Scandinavian dancing!

I started out dancing in my freshman year of college (University of Washington) when I went to a Scandinavian Department Christmas party and first saw the dancing around the department Christmas tree. I was entranced! I joined Skandia Folkdance Club, and within a year I was teaching my housemates songdansar, polka, reinlendar, and vals. Then came the set dances, pols, polska, masurka, and springeleik; and then I found myself leading Leikarringen, the performance dance group of my Sons of Norway Lodge (Leif Erikson, Seattle WA). I taught for some years at Experimental College (part of UW) and helped other people get their start on the dance floor. I also started singing the old ballads and kvad with my girlfriend, accompanied by my guitar.

Somewhere in there, I lived in Norway and traveled all over the country and in Sweden, looking for folkdances and music to bring home to America.

Only in the last ten years or so have I played for the dance on harp or flute. Scandinavian music on the Celtic harp is exquisitely beautiful and I always work a few pieces into my regular concert sets. It is such a joy to see an audience that hears Nordic music for the first time and becomes utterly captivated by its beauty! I have also been privileged to sing the haunting Norwegian ballad Draumkvedet in two performances here in Seattle.

I have led several tours to Scandinavia with musicians and dancers, the latest two being concert tours with other harp players. My goal was both to introduce Americans and Canadians to the beautiful Nordic countries and also to encourage the Scandinavians to take up the harp again. Folk harp pretty much died out in Norway after the Industrial Revolution, and almost so in Sweden, but there seems to be a surge in interest in both countries now. On one of my trips, I met the 'queen' of Norwegian folksinging, Kirsten Bråten Berg, and we performed four concerts together, two in the Northwest and two in Norway - THAT was the thrill of my musical career, I can tell you!

Thanks for collecting these stories from people! The Scandinavian folkdance community here and in Canada is indeed remarkable.

How did you get started … continued

I had an "exchange student" (A.F.S.) in my family in high school. While she was there, I checked out an l.p. from the local library and learned to sing (after a fashion) a lullabye, Lasse, Lasse, Liten, in Swedish. When Margareta got back to Sweden, she sent me a cassette of Åsa Jinder, who is from the same area near Stockholm that my "sister" was from, Danderyd. The tape had nyckelharpa on it. So that was my first "taste" of the sound.

Other than that, it's all Olov Johansson's fault!! I heard Väsen (his band) a few times and fell in love with the sound of the nyckelharpa. While attending a Nordic Music festival in Minnesota, I had the opportunity to participate in a workshop taught by Olov, and while sitting at the feet of the master, had a chance to hold an instrument....it was all inevitable at that time: I was bitten by the nyckelharpa bug!

I had ancestors from Sweden (and Denmark) and was curious about the land of their birth, and after traveling to Scandinavia with my parents in 1974, grew to love the land, the people and the culture. After joining the American Nyckelharpa Association, and seeing an ad for an instrument being offered on their "chat list", I agreed to get it "sight unseen" (except for a couple of photos) and it arrived in the mail shortly thereafter.

Now what to do? I needed some instruction. I had seen Tim Rued (Swedish Zorn bronze medal holder) play at the Renaissance Faire as well as at the Scandinavian Festival at Turlock, Ca. As a member of the local Butte Folk Music Society, and a band member for the monthly Contra Dances in Chico, I had experience organizing concerts and playing for dancers. I arranged for Tim to perform a couple of concerts, and offer me a couple of beginning lessons, and stayed at my house for a couple of days... and that was it--there was no turning back now!!

That spring, I went to the Seattle area for more lessons...this time from Cajsa Ekstav, who also taught at Scandia Camp Mendocino in the summer of 2010. I have returned to Sweden several times since...once with my harpa, traveling with several musicians (tour leader Tim Rued) and meeting lots of Swedish musicians. I have also joined my local chapter of the VASA Order, and become Cultural Chairperson of the Gold Nugget Lodge in Paradise, California. I also provide articles for the regional and national newsletter and magazine for VASA. I am pleased to be able to participate in the Northern California Spelmanslag to continue my skill-and-repertoire building on this instrument.

I feel I should design a t-shirt that says "READ MY SHIRT" on the front, and "It is a nyckelharpa, or key fiddle, a Swedish folk instrument" on the back, so that if people ask me questions while I play, I can turn around and keep playing!! By far my favorite thing to wear while playing is my Swedish Folk costume, or folkdräkt, which represents the province that my Great Grandfater Swenson was from, Skåne. One of my favorite tunes to play is a slangpolska from Småland, where my Great Grandmother was from. It makes me feel connected to the family tree!

never seen or heard before. I immediately searched for a recording in the library and found the Folkways "Norway" record. This ancient recording was music to my ears. I heard beautiful haunting sounds of hardingfele, vanlig fele, langeleik, seljefløyte and voice. As I was listening to the beautiful music, I kept thinking to myself, "Why had I not been exposed to this beautiful music before?"

I wrote to the Hardanger Fiddle Association of America immediately, and learned about the Scandinavian Week Camp at Buffalo Gap. I thought that I should try out the hardingfele before pursuing this alluring instrument any further. The event at the 1992 camp was life direction changing. There, I was exposed to fabulous music from Sweden and Norway, and some of the dancing traditions. The 1992 musical staff at the camp included Tony Wrethling, Leif Inge Schjølberg, Bruce Sagan, Loretta Kelley, and Dick Rees. They were, and still are, big influences on me and my music.

Having some Swedish ancestry did fuel my connection with the music, but I must say that it is the music, dancing and the very interesting people that make it all work for me. Playing with other people and for dances is one of the best pleasures in life.

From that point forward, I bought recordings and attended workshops here in the States. I mostly concentrated my efforts on playing Swedish and Norwegian regular fiddle. I have not played very much on the Hardanger fiddle, probably due to a lack of nearby players, but love listening to the music, especially the live playing at the annual HFFA event. I also dabble around playing on the piano accordion, piano, seljefløyte, langeleik, and goat horn.

A second life direction changing event happened when I went to Sweden in 2000 to study with Kalle Almlöf at Malungs Folkhögskola. Some immersion in the culture and intense technique study was an invaluable experience. I am still working on various techniques that I studied. This immersion also gave me a chance to get a more solid handle on basic dance steps.

In the mid 1990's, I began playing for local dancers, and then started the Scandinavian music ensemble that I named Ingevalds Spelmän. I reorganized the group in September 2006, and focused on recruiting both young musicians and a stable adult core. Around June 2010, we released our recording project titled "Spelar Runt på Prärien och i Skogen" or "Playing Around in the Prairie and the Forest." (http://ingevald.wordpress.com).

There has not been much of a serious Scandinavian musical presence in Kansas except for some activities in Lindsborg. I am very happy however, with the way things have turned out. If anyone is passing through Lawrence, please let me know.

Music as conversation
The energy in a tune comes from the story it tells

by Matt Fichtenbaum

----------Enough theory. What can you do for your own music?
You can only aim for the goals you know about. The first step is to listen to some music that excites you, and try to understand what’s happening in that music that makes it interesting. ........

For example,
• The rhythmic shape. Is it even? Is it asymmetric, and, if so, how? Does it swing?
• The accents. Are they on the beats? The offbeats? Both? As an exercise, you might play a march and accent the beats, then play it again, accenting the offbeats, and once more, accenting both the beats and the offbeats (but not the notes in between). Do these different styles inspire you to move in different ways, or to different degrees?
• The articulation. Do the notes start sharply, or do they start quiet and swell up? Do they end sharply, or do they fade away? Does the articulation vary throughout the tune, and does the variation follow a consistent pattern?
• The layers. Can you hear the basic rhythm below the melody? Can you divide the melody into “foreground” and “background,” for example, in a fast tune with lots of notes, do the notes on the beat carry the melody, with the other notes mostly adding garnish?

Sing the tune
The next step, in my opinion, is to learn a tune as an entirety, without concentrating on the note-by-note details. Listen to a recording over a couple of weeks’ time; even better, listen to different players’ recordings of the same tune. Try singing the tune (it’s OK; nobody’s listening). You probably sing more naturally than you play an instrument, and you’re not worrying about fingers and bow strokes. You can experiment with accenting and articulation, and the musicality and expression of the tune as you sing it might surprise you: in other words, you may understand its “soul” better than you consciously know.

Play phrases, not notes
Now, finally, it’s time to try playing the tune. But don’t try to play it a note at a time. Take a phrase or a couple of phrases or a whole section and try to play it. Play as slowly as you need to, but play it so that it hangs together, flows, has the shape you want it to have. By now you know the tune, you can sing it or at least hear it in your mind. Take that tune and move it to your instrument without breaking it into too-small fragments. Learn that first phrase so that you’re relaxed with it, then add the next and the one after, until you have the whole tune.

Learning tunes as phrases rather than individual notes has practical benefits, too. I think it’s easier to remember a few phrases and their order than a whole bunch of separate notes. And it may be easier to solve the technical challenges – fingering, bowing, string crossings – by dividing the tune into phrases. Divide and conquer.

Another observation
For the first phrase that you play, you have to learn the rhythm, the shape, and the notes of the melody; that’s a lot. It gets easier after that: the rhythm and the shape apply to the whole tune, and so learning the later phrases becomes easier. Besides, phrases repeat, or reappear as variations, so the way gets less steep as you progress.

Sculpting a sound with your bow
The articulation in your music comes from the bow. The bowing determines whether a note begins at full volume or starts quietly and grows, whether a note ends sharply or makes a smooth transition into the next note. The lift on the second beat of a bondpolska, the way the first beat of a Boda polska trails off into a period of quiet before the explosive start of the second beat, the difference between the smooth and the bouncy schottis tunes – the bow hand wields the power.

I have written before about bowing, about making the small movements and quick notes with the wrist, hand, and fingers (“as if you were writing with a pencil”), making the large movements and long notes with the shoulder and arm (“as if you were writing on a whiteboard”). And the notions of “brandishing” your bow for the sharp-edged notes, “caressing” the strings with it for the smooth phrases. What’s relevant here is the role that bowing plays in creating the shape and feel of your music. Listen for the articulation in the music you hear, and experiment with and develop your articulation as you work on the other aspects of your playing.

A word about written music
Printed text specifies what is to be said, but it’s the actor who determines how to say it, or the reader who hears it in his mind and supplies the emotional impact. I think it’s appropriate to draw a parallel with written music: the music specifies the notes to be played, but not how to play them or what they are to say.

By all means, use written music to remember tunes or to learn new tunes. But complete your version of the tune in other ways: by listening to other players’ versions, by knowing other tunes of the same style, by playing for dancers and asking for their feedback. This is an aural tradition, and transcriptions rarely tell you of the rhythmic subtleties, the dynamics, the ornaments.

Scandinavian and Nordic Internet Radio Stations
From Ruth Marie Sylte If you use iTunes (either for Mac or Win OS), you can download just about every Scandinavian (Norwegian, Danish, Swedish) radio station to iTunes by following these instructions (which I translated and have used with the permission of the original poster): <http://multemusic.com/2008/10/22/scandinavian-internet-radio-stations-itunes/>. med beste helsingar, Ruth Marie Sylte, Producer / On-Air Host / Programleder, Mute Music, c/o KYMN Radio, 200 Division Street South, Suite 260, Northfield, Minnesota 55057-2079 USA. <multemusic@gmail.com>, <http://MuteMusic.com>.

From Morten Alfred Høirup: I would like to mention the small Danish internet station Den 2. Radio, <www.den2radio.dk>, that is producing the world’s only online radio program focusing on the Danish roots and folk music scene. The program is called "Folk Danmark", and it is hosted in Danish, but also sometimes in English. Here, you will find programs about the music from the Danish island, Fanø, information about new albums, about the Danish singer song writers, contemporary folk music, as well as traditional music, and more. Folk Danmark has its own "group" at Facebook, look for "Folk Danmark", become a member and get a notice every time a new program is ready to be streamed.
